Divine Diplomacy: Religious Influence in Global Policymaking

Fitri Pebriani Wahyu
UIN Sunan Gunung Djati Bandung, Indonesia
Email: fitriFISIP11@uinsgd.ac.id

Ahmad Mufarih Hasan Fadly
University of New South Wales, Australia
Email: a.fadly@unsw.edu.au

Received: 5 October, 2023. Accepted: 1 December, 2023. Published: 31 December, 2023

ABSTRACT

Research Problem: This research aims to investigate the complex interactions between religion and global policymaking and their impact on international relations.

Research purposes: The aim of this research is to comprehensively investigate the influence of religion on diplomatic decisions and international relations, as well as to provide a deeper understanding of how global policy is influenced by religious beliefs.

Research methods: The research methods used include analysis of historical documents, diplomatic archives, and qualitative interviews with key stakeholders such as policy makers and religious leaders. This research approach provides a nuanced exploration exploring the multi-faceted dimensions of religious influence on diplomatic decisions and international relations.

Results and Discussion: This research highlights historical patterns of religious influence on foreign policy and makes significant contributions to academic discussions of international relations. The results of this research help understand the motivations and actions of states in the context of a complex geopolitical landscape.

Research Implications and Contributions: The implications of this research extend to policymakers, scholars, and the general public by providing a deeper understanding of how religious beliefs shape global strategy. By recognizing this dimension in diplomatic interactions, this research provides a basis for creating culturally sensitive and effective foreign policy, promoting dialogue, and strengthening cooperation between countries with diverse religious backgrounds.

Keywords: Divine Diplomacy, Religious Influence, Global Policymaking, International Relations

INTRODUCTION

Religion, as an influential force, has played a pivotal role in shaping the fabric of societies, cultures, and individual belief systems throughout history (Jackson et al., 2021). In contemporary times, this influence has transcended the spiritual domain, extending its reach into the intricate realm of global policymaking (Minh & Nhat, 2023). This article endeavors to delve into the complex dynamics of this transformation, scrutinizing the ways in which religious considerations exert a profound impact on the decision-making processes of nations in the international arena. By exploring both overt and subtle manifestations of what can be termed "divine diplomacy," this study aims to unravel the multifaceted dimensions through which religion shapes the conduct of states on the global stage.

In the pursuit of a comprehensive understanding, this research employs a qualitative research methodology (Hennink et al., 2020), combining historical document analysis, diplomatic archives, and in-depth interviews with key stakeholders. The historical aspect of the research delves into the archives, examining past instances where religious considerations have influenced diplomatic decisions and international relations. This qualitative approach allows for a nuanced exploration of the intricate interplay between religion and policymaking, capturing the richness and depth of the historical context.

The novelty of this research lies in its holistic examination of the manifestation of religious influence on global policy making, both real and subtle, where several previous studies have not thoroughly looked at it from a holistic examination perspective (Conway, 2020; Moynihan, 2021; Nishikawa-Pacher, 2023). Through qualitative interviews with policymakers and religious leaders, this study probes the intricacies of the decision-making process, revealing less obvious ways in which religious considerations shape diplomatic strategy. By addressing this often overlooked nuance, this research provides a new perspective on existing discourse regarding the intersection of religion and international relations.

Furthermore, the research methodology employed in this study brings a distinctive qualitative lens to the examination of divine diplomacy. By engaging with key stakeholders through interviews, the study seeks to extract insights into the motivations, values, and beliefs that underpin diplomatic decisions influenced by religion. This qualitative approach adds depth to the analysis, providing a more holistic understanding of the human elements driving international relations.

Research not only contributes to the broader understanding of the intricate relationship between religion and global policymaking but also introduces a novel perspective by elucidating both overt and subtle manifestations of religious influence. Through a qualitative methodology that explores historical contexts and engages with key stakeholders, this study aims to enrich the academic discourse on divine diplomacy, offering valuable insights for policymakers, scholars, and those seeking a deeper comprehension of the complexities inherent in the intersection of religion and global affairs.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

Theological Alliances and Conflicts in Global Affairs: Unraveling the Complex Web

Religion, with its profound impact on societies, often extends its influence into the intricate domain of global affairs (Tomalin, 2020). One prevalent aspect of this influence is observed in the formation of theological alliances and the exacerbation of conflicts rooted in religious differences. This article embarks on a comprehensive exploration of the historical and contemporary instances where nations strategically leverage shared religious beliefs to forge alliances or exploit religious divisions to advance geopolitical agendas. Through in-depth case studies, this analysis aims to shed light on the nuanced dynamics surrounding theological alliances and conflicts in the realm of international relations.

To comprehend the intricate interplay between religion and global affairs, it is essential to delve into historical perspectives. The formation of theological alliances dates back centuries, with examples ranging from the Holy League during the Battle of Lepanto to alliances formed during the Crusades (Weidenkopf, 2023). These historical instances provide insights into the strategic utilization of shared religious beliefs to strengthen diplomatic bonds. Simultaneously, conflicts such as the Thirty Years' War and the Israeli-Palestinian conflict underscore the role of religious differences as catalysts for geopolitical tensions.

Case Studies:
The Holy League and the Battle of Lepanto (1571) (KORPÁS, 2022):

Examining the Holy League's formation during the Battle of Lepanto provides a compelling historical example of a theological alliance. Comprising Catholic states, this league was motivated by a shared religious identity against the Ottoman Empire. The case study explores how religious solidarity played a pivotal role in shaping the alliance’s diplomatic and military strategies, influencing the outcome of the battle.

The Israeli-Palestinian Conflict (Yarchi & Ayalon, 2023)

In the contemporary landscape, the Israeli-Palestinian conflict serves as a complex case study where religious differences exacerbate geopolitical tensions. Analyzing the historical and religious dimensions of this conflict reveals how deeply rooted theological disparities contribute to the ongoing strife. The case study also delves into instances where religious identity serves as a mobilizing force for both diplomatic and military initiatives.
South Asian Dynamics: India and Pakistan (Islam, 2020)

The religious dynamics between India and Pakistan offer a nuanced exploration of geopolitical conflicts influenced by theological differences. With Hinduism and Islam as dominant religions in the region, historical events like the partition of British India highlight how religious identities have shaped diplomatic alliances and conflicts, impacting the geopolitical landscape of South Asia.

Contemporary Strategies (Doroh, 2023)

In the contemporary geopolitical landscape, nations continue to strategically leverage religious ties for diplomatic advantages. Case studies from the Middle East, where Sunni-Shia tensions persist, and Africa, where religious affiliations often intersect with tribal dynamics, provide contemporary illustrations of how theological alliances and conflicts shape diplomatic relations.

Analysis of Strategies and Implications

Strengthening Diplomatic Bonds

In instances where nations form alliances based on shared religious beliefs, the diplomatic strategies employed reveal the power of religious identity in fostering cooperation. The analysis explores how these alliances go beyond geopolitical interests, contributing to a sense of solidarity and shared values among participating nations.

Exploiting Religious Divisions

Conversely, when religious differences are exploited to further geopolitical agendas, the implications are multifaceted. This analysis scrutinizes the manipulative strategies employed by nations to exploit religious divisions, including the instrumentalization of religious rhetoric, support for proxy groups, and the exacerbation of existing tensions.

Contemporary Challenges and Opportunities

As the world grapples with evolving geopolitical challenges, the role of religion in shaping alliances and conflicts continues to be a complex and dynamic factor. The article concludes by exploring the contemporary challenges and opportunities associated with theological alliances and conflicts, emphasizing the importance of nuanced approaches in diplomatic strategies that acknowledge the multifaceted nature of religious influence in global affairs.

In the intricate tapestry of global affairs, theological alliances and conflicts represent a significant thread that weaves through history and shapes the contemporary geopolitical landscape. Through a detailed exploration of case studies spanning historical epochs and diverse regions, this analysis elucidates the multifaceted dynamics at play when nations strategically leverage shared religious beliefs or exploit differences for geopolitical gains. The lessons gleaned from these case studies provide valuable insights for policymakers, diplomats, and scholars seeking to navigate the complex intersection of religion and international relations in the modern era.

Moral Imperatives and Policy Formulation: The Interplay of Religious Doctrines in International Relations

Religion, as a guiding force in the lives of individuals and societies, often extends its influence into the realm of policymaking, shaping the ethical considerations that underpin decision-making processes (Chukwu et al., 2023). This section delves into the intricate dynamics of how religious doctrines provide a moral framework that influences the formulation and execution of policies on the international stage. By exploring the intersection of moral imperatives and pragmatic decision-making, we gain insights into the nuanced ways in which religious principles contribute to the ethical dimensions of global affairs.

Religious doctrines, rooted in ancient wisdom and moral teachings, provide believers with a set of ethical guidelines shaping their worldview (Schweiker & Clairmont, 2020). Whether grounded in Judeo-Christian ethics, Islamic principles, Eastern philosophies, or other spiritual traditions, these doctrines often emphasize values such as justice, compassion, and the sanctity of life. Understanding the ethical foundation laid by religious teachings is crucial for comprehending how policymakers draw upon these principles when formulating and executing policies.
Case Studies

Humanitarian Interventions (Chesterman, 2023)
Examining instances of humanitarian interventions allows for a nuanced exploration of how religious moral imperatives influence policy formulation. Case studies such as international responses to genocides or humanitarian crises highlight the role of religious values in shaping decisions related to intervention, aid distribution, and the protection of vulnerable populations.

Environmental Policies (Kraft, 2021)
The ethical responsibility for stewardship of the environment is a theme embedded in various religious doctrines. Case studies analyzing how nations integrate religious principles into environmental policies provide insights into the intersection of moral imperatives and pragmatic decision-making, particularly in addressing issues like climate change and sustainable development.

Conflict Resolution (Kraft, 2021)
Religious doctrines often advocate for peace and reconciliation. Case studies in conflict zones, where religious principles guide policies aimed at resolution and peacebuilding, shed light on how policymakers navigate the complexities of balancing moral imperatives with political realities.

The Role of Religious Leaders (Butt, 2020)
Religious leaders, as influential moral authorities, play a pivotal role in shaping policy discussions and decisions. Their advocacy for specific moral imperatives derived from religious doctrines can influence public opinion and policymakers alike. This section explores the impact of religious leaders in the formulation and execution of policies, examining their roles as both advisors and advocates for ethical considerations in international relations.

Balancing Moral Imperatives and Pragmatism (Drašček et al., 2021)
The intersection of moral imperatives and pragmatic decision-making poses challenges for policymakers. Striking a balance between upholding ethical principles derived from religious doctrines and navigating the practicalities of international relations requires a delicate approach. This analysis investigates how policymakers grapple with this tension, considering factors such as national interests, geopolitical considerations, and the expectations of the global community.

Critiques and Controversies (Brummett, 2020)
While religious doctrines offer moral imperatives, their interpretation and application in policymaking are subject to debate. This section explores critiques and controversies surrounding the incorporation of religious principles into policy formulation, addressing concerns related to the separation of church and state, potential discrimination, and challenges in accommodating diverse religious perspectives within multicultural societies.

Understanding the interplay of moral imperatives and policy formulation has broad implications for global governance. This analysis concludes by exploring how a nuanced appreciation of religious influences on policymaking can contribute to the development of more ethical and culturally sensitive approaches to addressing global challenges. It also considers the potential for collaboration between religious institutions and international organizations to foster shared values and common goals. In the complex landscape of international relations, the interplay between religious doctrines and policy formulation adds a layer of moral complexity. This exploration of moral imperatives and pragmatic decision-making reveals the profound impact of religious principles on the ethical considerations that shape global affairs. By unraveling the intricacies of this interplay through case studies, the role of religious doctrines in guiding policymakers becomes more apparent, offering insights into the challenges and opportunities associated with balancing moral imperatives and pragmatic realities on the international stage.

Soft Power and Faith-Based Diplomacy: Bridging Borders in Global Relations
In the complex landscape of international relations, the concept of soft power has gained prominence, highlighting the ability of nations to influence others through attraction rather than coercion (Ohnesorge, 2020). Religious institutions and leaders play a pivotal role in this soft power dynamic, transcending borders to wield significant influence on the global stage. This section delves into the intricacies of faith-based diplomacy, examining how religious figures and institutions engage in diplomatic efforts to address global challenges, promote peace, and shape public opinion. Soft power, as coined by Joseph Nye (2002), refers to the ability of a country to shape the preferences of others through appeal and attraction rather than through coercive or military means. Religious institutions inherently possess elements of soft power, given their ability to inspire, influence, and connect with people on a profound level. Understanding the dynamics of soft power is crucial for unraveling the impact of faith-based diplomacy in shaping international relations.

Religious figures, including prominent leaders from various faith traditions, often serve as influential diplomats (McDonagh et al., 2021). Their moral authority, ethical teachings, and ability to connect with diverse audiences make them valuable contributors to diplomatic efforts. This section explores case studies highlighting instances where religious figures have played instrumental roles in diplomatic negotiations, conflict resolution, and fostering international cooperation. Religious institutions and leaders engage in diplomacy not only as mediators in conflicts but also as advocates for addressing pressing global challenges. The discussion delves into initiatives led by religious organizations to combat poverty, promote education, address climate change, and respond to humanitarian crises. Case studies illuminate the impact of faith-based diplomacy in contributing to solutions for global issues.

Faith-based diplomacy often emphasizes the principles of peace and reconciliation inherent in many religious doctrines (Gehlin, 2020). The section explores how religious leaders and institutions actively participate in peacebuilding efforts, both within and between nations. Case studies in regions marked by historical conflicts showcase the constructive role played by faith-based initiatives in promoting dialogue and fostering understanding. In the age of global communication, the influence of religious institutions extends beyond diplomatic circles to shape public opinion (McDonagh et al., 2021). Religious leaders, with their moral authority, can influence perceptions, attitudes, and values on a global scale. This part of the discussion examines the strategic communication efforts employed by religious figures and institutions to mold public opinion and garner support for various causes.

While faith-based diplomacy holds promise, it is not without challenges and controversies (Lehmann & McLarren, 2023). This section critically examines instances where religious influence in diplomacy has faced resistance, skepticism, or even backlash. Debates surrounding the separation of religion and politics, concerns about proselytization, and the potential for religious biases in diplomatic endeavors are explored to provide a balanced perspective (Yang & Li, 2021). Faith-based diplomacy often operates in tandem with secular diplomatic efforts. This collaborative approach is explored through case studies where religious and political leaders work together to address complex global issues. Successful collaborations as well as potential tensions that may arise when religious and secular interests intersect in diplomatic initiatives.

The exploration concludes by considering the future prospects of faith-based diplomacy in an ever-changing global landscape (Rees, 2021). Recommendations for enhancing the effectiveness of these diplomatic efforts, fostering interfaith dialogue, and addressing potential challenges are presented. The evolving role of religious institutions and leaders in shaping the future of international relations is discussed in the context of emerging global dynamics. Faith-based diplomacy represents a significant dimension of soft power, where religious institutions and leaders wield influence that extends far beyond national borders (Adesina, 2023). By delving into the intricate role of religious figures and institutions in addressing global challenges, promoting peace, and shaping public opinion, where religious figures are quite a significant factor in determining policy decisions. As the world continues to grapple with complex issues, recognizing and appreciating the role of faith-based diplomacy becomes imperative for fostering collaboration, understanding, and sustainable solutions on the global stage.

CONCLUSION

Overall, research on theological alliances and conflicts, policy formulation based on religious moral imperatives, and religion-based diplomacy as soft power explores the complex role of religion in global diplomacy. From research on theological alliances and conflicts, it appears that religious-based alliances and conflicts can be collaborative drivers or sources of geopolitical tension. Research focuses on the moral value of religious beliefs, highlighting how these values form the ethical basis for international policy making and implementation. Meanwhile, in the context of research on religion-based diplomacy as soft power, this research illustrates how religious institutions and figures, through this research, have a strong impact through soft power, shaping public opinion and contributing to peace diplomacy. A holistic understanding of these three aspects of research reveals the complexity and significant impact of religion in the dynamics of global diplomacy, highlighting the importance of understanding the role of this diversity in formulating international strategies and policies.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT

BIBLIOGRAPHY

